Experience It!

Butchart Gardens

In the late 1800's, a concrete merchant named Robert Pim Butchart ventured out to western Canada in search of limestone, an essential ingredient for his cement producing business. He moved his family to Vancouver Island, where he opened a processing facility adjacent to his home. After many successful years in business, his limestone quarry became barren, and Mr. Butchart was left with a gigantic hole in his backyard.

He and his wife Jenny had a plan to fill the floor of the quarry with soil and create a gigantic sunken garden. As she began planting flowers, he began adding a collection of birds, and a colorful display began to take shape.

Soon, word began to spread about this magnificent piece of landscape. Since the 1920's, more than 1 million nature lovers have made a pilgrimage to see this spectacle. When you tour British Columbia with Collette Vacations, you will have an opportunity to visit this palatial park. Stroll through 50 acres of beautiful plants and colorful flowers and admire the Butcharts' hard work and creativity.
